TWO SONS.

[By Robert Buchanan.]

I HAVE two sons, wife,—
Two, and yet the same;
One his wild way runs, wife,
Bringing us to shame.
The one is bearded, sunburnt, grim, and fights across the sea;
The other is a little child who sits upon your knee.

One is fierce and bold, wife,
As the wayward deep;
Him no arms could hold, wife,
Him no breast could keep.
He has tried our hearts for many a year, not broken them, for he
Is still the sinless little one that sits upon your knee.

One may fall in fight, wife,—
Is he not our son?
Pray with all your might, wife,
For the wayward one;
Pray for the dark, rough soldier who fights across the sea,
Because you love the little shade who smiles upon your knee.

One across the foam, wife,
As I speak may fall;
But this one at home, wife,
Cannot die at all.
They both are only one, and how thankful should we be
We cannot lose the darling son who sits upon your knee!

MRS. BUSBY'S IDOLS.

BY HOPE DARING.

Mr. Joseph Busby eyed the sky as he leisurely walked from the barn to the house. The morning sun was veiled by a fleecy mist, while low in the southwest a bank of dark gray clouds was visible.

After his prolonged scrutiny, Mr. Busby pondered the matter. It was not until he had washed his hands and face on the back kitchen porch and entered the room where his wife was taking up the breakfast, that he said:

"Pears like it might rain."

"That is what you always say if there's a cloud in the sky," Mrs. Busby said tartly. "I'll thank you to lift that boiler on, just the same."

"Goen to wash? It's most certain to rain."

"Let it rain. I haven't any patience with such weather," and Mrs. Busby rushed down cellar after a pitcher of cream.

Her husband never hurried. He put the boiler carefully on the stove, built up a good fire, and, in obedience to a gesture from his wife, took his place at the table.

Mr. Busby always thought before he spoke. This time, after a brief but earnest blessing, he devoted himself to ham, eggs and potatoes for five minutes before saying in his usual drawling voice:

"That was a powerful sermon of the elder yesterday, Mirandy. I always thought that text about Ephraim bein jined to his idols might apply to some of us. Most everybody has idols of some sort or other."

Mrs. Busby stirred her golden brown coffee reflectively. "Perhaps so. I hope the people who needs it took Mr. Ranton's fine application. As for me I once had an idol, but God took it."

There was a pause. The thoughts of both husband and wife traveled to the parlor where hung the picture of a child, a wee maiden with laughing blue eyes and dimpled arms. It was the picture of little Leah, their only child, whose death twenty years before had left the old farm home desolate.

Mr. Busby's heart was too deeply stirred by memories of his child to speak. But when a dash of rain came against the window pane the wife exclaimed crossly:

"There, it's raining. And if I don't wash Monday nothing goes right all the week."

"Tain't an idol, is it, Mirandy?" The good man of the house pushed back from the table. "Now, it don't seem jest right to be so sot as you air on doen your work exactly as you want to. It 'pears to me it might be an idol."

"What an idea! Just look there, Joseph. See that dirty spot on the tablecloth where you've rubbed your old coat sleeve. This tablecloth was clean yesterday morning and now it must go in the wash, making three this week. I do wish you would be more careful."

"Why, now, Mirandy, I do try to be careful. I wish you would use colored tablecloths. I thought you bought some turkey red ones."

"Yes, I did buy them," and a look of disgust crossed the face opposite Mr. Busby. "But I want it understood I am not going to use 'em. I will work my fingers to the bone before I'll set my table with anything but a white cloth," and she stroked the glossy linen approvingly.

"I know, Mirandy, but maybe that's another idol. You see, you think a sight of such things."

"Now, Joseph Busby, if you are going to talk such nonsense as that you better get to work. Just see there. The sun is shining. So you see it was right for me to wash after all."

"Maybe so," and the eyes of the simple-hearted man softened as he looked through the east window at the sun-kissed foliage from which the rain drops were yet falling. "Maybe so, Mirandy. You air an uncommon woman and have been a good wife to me for twenty-seven years. You ain't got many idols, Mirandy, not half as many as I have. But this always thinken your way is best—"

"See here, Joseph Busby," there was an undertone of almost fierceness in her voice. "I think such twisting of the Scriptures is sinful. If I have idols, I can tend to 'em, that's all," and Mrs. Busby strode into her bedroom and shut the door violently.

When she returned to the kitchen she was in possession of the field. Joseph had gone to his work.

"High time," she sniffed; "idols, indeed!"

She put her clothes to soak, and carrying her dishes into the pantry began washing them. Her thoughts were not pleasant ones; the frown on her face told that. The window before which she stood was covered with a thick growth of morning glory vines. A few of the daintily twisted buds, unheeding the threatening of storm, had opened their pink, blue and white cups and peered in at the flushed face of the worker. But Mrs. Busby was too busy, too disturbed by her husband's words to notice their beauty.

"I don't see what possessed Joseph to say that," she said, as she began rubbing her clothes. "I gave up the only idol I ever had twenty years ago. I—"

She stopped abruptly. "Of course, it's that letter," she went on, after a brief pause. "But he is wrong. It isn't idols that keep me from doing my—"

Again she stopped. She had almost said duty. A week before a letter had come from a little town in Kansas to Mr. Busby. The letter contained news of the death of Mrs. Emma Hale, a distant cousin of Joseph. Mrs. Hale was a widow and left one child, a boy, two years old. The writer, a neighbor of the dead woman, went on to say she could care for the child no longer, and if his relatives did not come for him he would be sent to the poorhouse. Joseph pondered the matter a day and a night. He then coolly proposed sending for the child and adopting it. His wife flatly refused. What—a child, a two-year old baby, to make litter on her clean floors and upset her orderly plan of life?

"You must be crazy, Joseph," she said severely. "If it was a girl, now, and big enough to be out from under foot, I might think of it. But there hain't no use talking about it."

Joseph Busby rarely opposed his wife, even in so small a matter as talking when she bade him be silent. However, this time he said:

"We air growen old, Mirandy. The baby would be something to love us."

These words came back to Mrs. Busby as she bent over the wash tub. Did she and Joseph need something to love them? She thought of the rambling old house with its many rooms, of the fertile acres surrounding it, and of the comfortable bank account. Then her mind wandered to the distant cemetery where a white marble cross marked her baby's grave.

"I couldn't give Leah's place to another," she whispered. "And yet he might make a place for himself. Oh, my baby, I miss her still."

Withdrawing her hands from the suds, Mrs. Busby crossed the sitting room and entered the parlor. No one knew, not even her husband, how many troublesome questions the mother settled before her child's picture.

She opened the blinds and looked long and earnestly at the laughing baby face.

"Do you want me to, dear?" she asked tearfully. "Do you want me to take a noisy, troublesome boy into this home? Is it an idol, Leah, my wanting everything so quiet and orderly?"

Ten minutes later she was back at her washing. The parlor blinds were closed and all things were as they had been excepting Mrs. Busby's eyes; there was a new light in their gray depths. At half-past nine the last clothes were on the line. Returning from hanging them out, Mrs. Busby found a neighbor, Mr. Vance, at the door.

"I've been down to the station," he said, "and the eight o'clock train brought a baby for you, or Busby, rather."

"A what!" demanded Mrs. Busby, catching her breath.

"A baby." It was plain to see that Mr. Vance was enjoying the situation. "A woman who was going east on a visit brought it from Kansas. Said it belonged to some of Busby's folks. She left it in care of the ticket agent and he sent it over by me. It's down to the road in my wagon, and a trunk too. The little fellow has cried most ever since the woman left him."

Mrs. Busby took down her green gingham sunbonnet and prepared to follow him out to the wagon without a word.

"Was you expecting it?" Mr. Vance asked, somewhat disappointed at her quietness.

"Not to-day," she replied, briefly.

It was a plump, but tear-stained little face that met her eager gaze. There were great blue eyes, a rosy mouth and closely-curling yellow hair. But the child was unmistakably dirty and began crying again in a piteous fashion.

Mrs. Busby held up her arms. "Come to auntie, dear," she said coaxingly. "You want some bread and milk, don't you, and to see the dear little chickens?"

At the same leisurely gait of the morning Mr. Busby again traversed the path from the barn to the house. Mirandy's line of snowy clothes drying in the sun brought to his mind the conversation of the morning, but he expected no reference to it from his wife. A surprise awaited him. The table was laid for three, and at the guest's place stood a clumsy little high chair that for twenty years had stood empty in an upper room. And on the floor sat a happy faced child surrounded by clothes-pins, empty bottles, a disused candlestick and a like collection of impromptu playthings.

"Who—who is that, Mirandy?"

"Joey Hale Busby," was Miranda's prompt reply, and picking up the child she put it in her husband's arms. "There, Joey dear, make friends with Uncle Joseph. He is the dearest little fellow," she went on, "so cunning and not a bit afraid."

"But I don't understand," and Joseph Busby's arms closed tenderly around the little orphan.

The story was soon told.

"Of course, we'll keep him, and do the best we can by him." Mrs. Busby said by way of conclusion. "Dinner is ready and the green peas and custard pie will taste good to little Joey. I guess you were right 'bout my idols, Joseph," stopping to fasten a towel around the child's neck in lieu of a bib, "but they are overthrown. Now I'll try and not make an idol of Joey."

"You air a remarkable woman, Mirandy," Mr. Busby said, wiping his eyes. "I have always said you was a remarkable woman, and I'm a leetle afraid I am maken an idol of you."—N. Y. Observer.

Farmers in the vicinity of Middle Spring are hauling water from the spring, the supply on their farms being exhausted.

Presiding Elder J. P. Anthony of the U. B. church, baptized five persons by immersion at McKinney, on Tuesday of last week.

B. F. Jones, of McKinney, has been appointed correspondent of this Statistical Division, by the U. S. Department of Agriculture at Washington.

At the funeral of Miss Maggie Diamond, near Hollidaysburg a few days ago, the mother dropped dead by the coffin as it was being taken from the house.

Spangler, Cambria county, is experiencing an epidemic of scarlet and typhoid fever. In some cases entire families are down with the disease and in others two and three members have already died.

A five year son of Mr. Spiker was burned to death Monday of last week near Mifflintown. The child was alone in the kitchen of the dwelling and played with the fire in the stove which ignited its clothing.

The number of unknown dead men found in freight cars on all the lines of railroads in the state, are becoming a source of considerable expense to dispose of them decently, which as a rule, is borne by these corporations.

A jury in a Chicago court awarded ex-Congressman R. W. Dunham $15,000 damages for the alienation of his wife's affections by Mayor E. L. Allyn. The former Mrs. Dunham is now Mrs. Allyn, the ex-Congressman having obtained a divorce.

A bronze figure of Moses, 6 feet, 6 inches high, modelled by C. N. Neibaus, has been cast at the Gorham's Manufacturing Company's Works, at Providence, Rhode Island. The figure is for the rotunda of the new Congressional Library building, at Washington.

The history of this country has abundantly shown that when the conscience of the American people is aroused, it is the most potent factor in American politics, defeating and bringing to shame the cunningly devised schemes of politicians that disregard or condemn it.—Lyman Abbott.

Congressman Hicks has been appointed by Auditor General Gregg escheator of the estate of Cyrus Bailey who died at Altoona last year with no direct heirs and leaving an estate valued at $30.000. Bailey has an illegitimate son who was born in Franklin county in 1825.—Mount Union Times.

Charles Spang, Sharpsburg, Md., recently found a gun in the Potomac river, near the Antietam cement mill. The wood was considerably water worn. It is thought to have belonged to the Corn Exchange Regiment, and has been lying there ever since the battle of Antietam.

Cards are out announcing the marriage at the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. Margaret Phipps Parker, of Parker, Pa., Wednesday evening, October 23, of Howard Scott Austin and Miss Jane Parker. The groom is a son of Major Rowland Austin, Saluvia, and a brother of P. R. Austin, Chambersburg.

O. T. Reilly has placed in position on the Antietam battlefield three markers four feet high, marking positions, of the Third Pennsylvania Cavalry September 16 and 17, 1862. These troops opened the fight, being Gen. Hooker's escort, and met the Confederates on the afternoon of September 16, near George Line's house.

The fifteenth annual reunion of the Juniata veterans was an event of unusual importance at Mifflintown, Thursday, the 17th inst. Military organizations and civic societies turned out in large numbers. At the evening meeting in the court house John D. Hicks, of Altoona, and Thomas H. Kay, of Philadelphia, talked to a large audience.

Next year, 1896, will be leap year. The girls will do well to make most of the opportunity, for it will be eight years before another comes. The year 1900 will not be leap year. The year is 365 days and six hours long, less eleven minutes. The eleven minutes amount to one day in one hundred years, when leap year is dispensed with. The year 1900 will therefore not be a leap year.

It has been decided by the Pennsylvania railroad officials to permanently increase their water supply at once in Altoona. Preparations have already been made to construct a reservoir along the Pennsylvania and Northwestern railroad and from it pipe the water of Bells' Run into the city. Tipton Run will also be secured. It is expected the work will be completed in three or four months.

George Young, a well-known and wealthy citizen of Hanover, York county, ended his life Wednesday night of last week in his orchard by sending a bullet through his head. Despondency caused by ill-health is said to have prompted the act. He owned a 3,500 acre farm in Virginia, where he spent much of his time. He returned from there but a short time ago, since which he has been suffering from malaria.

A dispatch from Hollidaysburg says: Edward Smith, a wealthy old bachelor, of Lincoln, Neb., recently inserted this want advertisement in a Chicago paper: "Wanted—A wife, who is not a new woman." Miss Mary Keller, a well-known and prepossessing young woman of Hollidaysburg, read the advertisement, and the correspondence that followed resulted in the marriage of the couple. Mr. and Mrs. Smith left for their western home.

Since the matter of individual communion cups has been more or less discussed in the churches, a Delaware inventor has hit upon a novel plan of freeing the individual from any contact with the general cup, while not calling into use individual cups. The device consists of a little silver tube which permits one to draw up a liquid from a cup but which by means of a valve, prevents anything from returning to the same. His idea is that supplied with these tubes any one who was fearful of contagion could partake of the sacrament without danger of disease.

Mrs. Joseph Manning, wife of a prosperous farmer living near Matamoras, Dauphin county, died Wednesday of last week after a brief illness, and Thursday her husband became violently insane from grief. He drove his children and neighbors from the house, and in a frenzy of mad rage overturned the ice box, throwing the corpse upon the floor. Manning is a powerful man and has terrorized the neighborhood. He will permit no one to approach the house to replace the body and prepare it for burial.

Observant practitioners have so frequently recorded the appearance of diphtheria in families of their patients simultaneously with or subsequent to the illness of the "harmless (?) necessary (?) cat" with an obscure throat affection that the coincidence can hardly be regarded as accidental. Dr. Williams again notes a series of cases, in one of which three cats in a household with symptoms of throat disease were nursed by children, who almost immediately developed symptoms of diphtheria. It would seem to be desirable to examine the household cat when diphtheria makes its appearance.

While attending to some household work recently, Mrs. Raum Pague, Shippensburg, fell from a stepladder and when found was lying in a helpless condition on the floor. Dr. R. C. Stewart was hastily summoned and found that she was severely injured, although no bones were broken. The muscles of the back are very much sprained and one limb is partially paralyzed. Mrs. Pague's eyesight has been impaired for sometime, and this, no doubt, was the cause of the accident. She will be confined to bed for some time.

The postoffice department at Washington has made public a statement showing receipts of the 30 largest postoffices of the United States for the third quarter ended October 1, 1895, and the increase over a corresponding period of 1894. the statement shows this to have been one of the most prosperous three months in the history of the postal service. The total receipts for the quarter were $7,400,449, an increase of $666,730 over the same quarter of 1894, and an increase of nearly $800,900 over the same quarter of 1893.

The colored National convention completed its work in Washington, D. C., Thursday afternoon, when Chairman James W. Poe declared it adjourned to meet at Richmond, Va., the second Tuesday in July, 1896. It adopted a long platform denouncing the administration of President Cleveland, and also the crime of lynching; reaffirming its allegiance to the Republican party; favoring freedom for Cuba; declaring in favor of the use of both gold and silver as money; eulogizing Morton, Reed, Harrison, Allison, Sherman and practically endorsing the candidacy of McKinley.

An old arm chair, which once belonged to the Schnebleys, one of the oldest families in Franklin Co., afterwards to Col. George Davidson, until the death of his wife, who was a Snively, and then passed into the family of Col. Winger, until a year or two, ago, when, with other household stuff, it was sold at public sale and bought by Mrs. Ella Bowman Goetz for fifteen cents, was purchased from Mrs. Goetz for a good round sum last week by Mrs. M. J. Newcomer, of Indianapolis, Indiana, she tracing its antiquity to one of her ancestors. It was shipped to her home in Indianapolis.

Most of the division fences that separate the religious sects are imaginary lines. Two warships were pouring broadsides into each other, but when the fog cleared off they found they were flying the same flag. When the theological mists at last shall lift their leaden folds and roll away, we shall see perhaps that the folks we are firing into are our brethren and friends in Christ. A general dashed up to a smoking battery on the battlefield, and shouted, "That was a grand volley boys, but don't do that again, you are firing into our own 49th." Let us train all our artillery on the devil's ranks. —Domestic Journal.

The estimates of the attendance at the Hagerstown fair Thursday of last week differ some, but the weight of opinion seems to be that it was larger than last year. The railroads took fewer people by 1146 this year than last, but the cash receipts at the gates were $1000 greater than ever before. It is probable that more people remained in Hagerstown on Wednesday night than on corresponding nights of other years, as there was considerable difficulty in lodging all that stayed. It is generally agreed among those who had charge of the fair that this year beats all former records. There was good order throughout the fair.

The Bedford Gazette says: "At the second annual Old Folks Day held in Alliance, Ohio, a few days ago, a dinner was served in the Methodist Episcopal church at which were seated 80 of the aged guests. Among them were Elizabeth Byers, aged 103; Priscilla Spooner, 102; Catherine Hooble, 101; Letitia L. Walker, 100; James R. Green of Waterloo fame, 98; Sarah Greenawalt, 97; Robert C. Hutchinson, 96; Maria Messmer, 95; Luther Butler 94; Augustus Halden, 93; Jonathan King, 92; Dr. Josiah Bebout, 92; James Bayils, 91; Elizabeth Ware, 91; William S. Ware, 90; Rev. John Schoffer, 90; James Thompson, 90. Not one less than 75 years old.

Mrs. Zorbaugh, aged about thirty years, wife of Henry Zorbaugh, a farmer residing at New Salem, York county, met a horrible fate and died in terrible agony about 4 o'clock Wednesday morning of last week. Mrs. Zorbaugh was engaged in boiling apple butter. Her clothing came in contact with the fire under the kettle and ignited. When discovered she was enveloped in flames. Before the flames could be extinguished the clothes were burned from her body and she was burned to a crisp. In spite of her dreadful condition she lingered until Thursday morning, suffering agonizing pain till death relieved her. The deceased leaves a husband and a large family of small children.

At the recent convention of the National Association of Retail Liquor Dealers, Washington, the need of more radical steps for protection of their interests and more powerful organization at Washington to combat the temperance movement was urged, and it was asserted that without some such action the effect of the movement would be soon felt in the "shaking of the liquor interests from center to circumference." One of the resolutions passed reads: "We emphatically denounce all illicit and disreputable resorts, because they propagate drunkenness and debauchery among the youth of the community, desecrate the Sabbath and cast an odium on the legitimate trade, and we therefore pledge ourselves to assist in their suppression."

The words of the late Artemus Ward on the "New Woman" are as applicable now as when he uttered them years ago. The class of women who wish to be designated by the word "New" he calls "he-lookin females" His words are still worth repeating: "O, woman, woman,' I cried, my feelins worked up to a hi poetick, pitch, 'you air a angle when you behave yourself; but when you take off your proper appairel and, (mettyforicaly speaken) get into pantyloons —when you desert your firesides, and with your heads full of wimin's rites, noshuns go around like roarin lyons, seekin' whom you may devour someboddy—in short, when you undertake to play the man, you play the devil and air an emfatic noosence. My female friends,' I continnered, as they were indignantly departin,' wa well what A. Ward has sed?'"

An intrepid Swedish aeronaut, S. A. Andree, is now building an immense balloon with which he intends to start some time next June from a point on the northwestern cost of Spitzbergen and navigate through the air across the North Pole landing at the extreme western point of Alaska. The trip is to consume fourteen days. The carriage will be amply and thoroughly furnished with every sort of scientific instrument for observations and well provided with all things necessary for comfort, accident or danger. The expedition will cost about $45,000, which scientists in Sweden and France have contributed. He will be accompanied by two or three persons. The scientific world will watch this voyage with profoundest interest. The experiences of this scientist in aerial navigation give hope of the success of this enterprise to the promoters.

"Wasp" And "Reindeer."

It was this spot (the English channel), right in the teeth of the British naval power, that the Wasp chose for her cruising ground. Hither and thither she sailed through the narrow seas, capturing and destroying the merchantmen, and by seamanship of the crew, and the skill and vigilance of her commander, escaping the pursuit of frigate and ship-of-the-line. Before she had been long on the ground, one June morning, while in chase of a couple of merchant ships, she spied a sloop-of-war, the British brig Reindeer, of 18 guns, and 120 men. The Reindeer was a weaker ship than the Wasp, her guns were lighter and her men fewer; but her commander, Capt. Manners, was one of the most gallant men in the British navy, and he promptly took up the gage of battle which the Wasp threw down.

The day was calm and nearly still; only a light wind stirred across the sea. At 1 o'clock the Wasp's drum beat to quarters, and the sailors and marines gathered at their appointed posts. The drum of the Reindeer responded to the challenge; and with her sails reduced to fighting trim, her guns run out, and every man ready, she came down on the Yankee ship. On her forecastle she had rigged a light carronade, and coming up from behind she five times discharged this point blank into the American sloop. Then, in the light air, the latter loofed around, firing her guns as they bore, and the two ships engaged yard-arm to yardarm. The guns leaped and thundered as the grimy gunners hurled them out to fire, working like demons. For a few minutes the cannonade on both sides was tremendous, and the men in the tops could hardly see the decks for the wreck of flying splinters. Then the vessels ground together, and through the open ports the rival gunners hewed, hacked, and thrust at one another, while the black smoke curled up from between the hulls. The English were suffering terribly; Captain Manners himself was wounded, and, realizing that he was doomed to defeat unless by some desperate effort he could avert it, he gave the signal to board. At the call the boarders gathered around, many of them naked to the waist, and black with powder, holding cutlas and pistol in their hands. But the Americans were ready. The marines were drawn up on deck, the pikemen stood behind the bulwarks, and the officers watched, cool and alert for every movement of their foe.

Then the British sea-dogs tumbled abroad, only to perish by shot and steel. The combatants slashed and and stabbed with savage fury, and the assailants were driven back. Manners sprang to their head to lead them again himself, when a ball fired by one of the sailors in the American tops crushed through his skull, and he fell, sword in hand, with his face to the foe dying as honorable a death as ever a brave man died in fighting against odds for the flag of this country. As he fell the American officer passed the word to board. With wild cheers the fighting sailor-men sprang forward, sweeping the wreck of the British force before them, and in a minute the Reindeer was in their posession. All of her officers, and nearly two-thirds of the crew were killed or wounded. Twenty-six of the Americans had been killed or wounded.

The Great War Song.

Reminiscences of Dr. Root, the composer, and of the effect of his war songs are now the order of the day. Dr. Root's greatest war song, in the sense of inspiration and success, was "The Battle Cry of Freedom," although "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp the Boys Are Marching," was, and still is, regarded with great favor by those whose blood continues to thrill with the enthusiasm of '65. Written early in 1861, at a time when patriotism was at a fever heat, "The Battle Cry of Freedom" struck a popular and inspiring chord, and from the time that it became known to the end of the war it was a veritable battle cry, sung by soldiers on a thousand fields and played by every northern military band between the two oceans. The inspiration of such a song at such a time was electric, and no man will ever know how many battles were won through the influence of this patriotic war cry.

The song was first publicly uttered by the then celebrated Hutchinson family at a meeting held in Union square, New York, and the testimony of the time is that it struck fire instantly, and soon excited a demand for copies only equaled at a later day by Henry C. Work's famous composition: "Marching Through Georgia," It is said that during the terrible battle of the Wilderness, May 6, 1864, a brigade of the Ninth corps, having broken the enemy's line by an assault, became exposed to a flank attack and was driven back in disorder with heavy loss. They retreated but a few hundred yards, however, reformed and again confronted the enemy. Just then, the historian says, some gallant fellow in the ranks of the Forty-fifth Pennsylvania began to sing.

"We'll rally round the flag, boys,
Rally once again,
Shouting the battle cry of freedom."

The refrain was caught up by the entire regiment and by other troops in line, and, inspired by its patriotric ardor, the soldiers but lately in retreat stood firm and met the crash of battle undaunted.—Chicago Times-Herald.

The Color of the Sky.

Prof. W. Spring, in discussing the question, "Why is the sky blue?" has approached pretty near a solution, if he has not really reached it. After promising that, excepting nitrogen, the principal constituents of the air —oxygen, watery vapor, ozone, etc.— are blue when subjected to strong pressure, he points out that the course taken by the sun's direct rays is, nevertheless, too short to allow of their acquiring so intense a hue as that which we actually perceive. Assuming, therefore, that the all-pervading illumination of the heavens is produced by polarized, and not by direct light, he offers the following explanation: The solar rays after striking the earth's surface are reflected from the latter in every direction. Passing upward they encounter atmospheric layers of gradually decreasing densities. by which they are more and more diverted from their normal pathway. The highest of these layers they will strike at so wide an angle as to be unable to penetrate them. This must give rise to the well-known phenomenon of total reflection, and the rays return to our level after having taken a much longer journey than if they were direct. In this way they reach us from far off regions by a kind of celestial mirage, conveying the color (which, as said above, is blue) of the denser layers traversed.

ONLY SIX TO BE VOTED FOR.

Last week the Review noted the decision of Judge Simonton that the Superior Court Act was unconstitutional and that seven candidates for Superior Court Judges would be voted for on a single ticket.

On Thursday last the Supreme Court sitting in Pittsburg reversed the decision of Judge Simonton and declared the Act constitutional so only six candidates can be voted for on one ticket: The decision was pronounced by Justice Dean, Chief Justice Sterrett and Associate Williams dissenting.

"The point on which the decision turns is whether the Legislature was prohibited by the Constitution from putting any limitation on the powers of voters in electing Judges of the Superior Court. There are seven candidates to be voted for and the Legislature has declared that no voter shall vote for more than six. This the Court holds the Legislature had a right to do. The constitutional provision that voters 'shall be entitled to vote at all elections,' cannot under any reasonable interpretation include an absolute right to vote for every candidate of a group of candidates for the same office.

The Constitution establishes limited voting in the election of Supreme Court Judges, County Commissioners, Philadelphia Magistrates and inspectors of election; therefore it is argued the implication is that the plan is excluded in the election of all other officers, But the limited voting plan was recognized and adopted in the Constitution because it was deemed wise that as to the offices, nonpartisan in character, or which at least should be, the minority party ought to have representation and this could only be attained by limited voting. In the cases specified the Constitution is mandatory. It says to the legislators in those enumerated, thou shalt prescribe the limited voting plan; in the cases not enumerated it is discretionary.

For the same reasons herein stated, as well as for those assigned in the opinion of Judge McPherson, the decree of the court below is reversed and the petition of the Attorney General for a mandamus is dismissed at the cost of the appellee."

CAN THERE BE A REMEDY?

For years it has been a grave question to know what to do with the old soldier pensioners who are intemperate and many of whom have families who need the pension money the husbands and fathers spend for drink.

Captain Skinner, the Pittsburg pension agent, who sees the evil results of money going into the hands of this class of men has addressed inquiries to a number of persons, asking for suggestions as to how this evil may be remedied, if it can be remedied at all. In his communication the Captain refers to instances that have come under his personal observation in which he says a pension is a curse instead of the blessing a grateful government intended it to be. He is convinced that hundreds of pensioners in Pittsburg would be better off mentally, morally and physically if none of the money allowed them by the government was permitted to go into their hands." He further says, "I have had wives and children come to me frequently and ask if there was no way by which they could secure a portion of this money to meet the dire necessities of the family." And in some instances wives have gone to him and said they would rather the government would stop the pension entirely. As he says, this is a very important matter and should be thoughtfully considered by all who have an interest in the old soldiers and their families. In every locality this evil has been recognized and is deplored by all good people. In some way it should be obviated, but the question is how?

It is strange that no remedial measures have been attempted by congress which would mitigate if not entirely remove the evil. Congressmen are closer to a large number of pensioners in their respective districts than are any other persons; they see the evil; they know how great the evil is, and they should be able to provide a remedy if one can be provided.

Those who have this matter at heart and believe that they can make valuable suggestions should write Captain Skinner, as he would be glad to hear from them.

WE HAVE NOT learned that Arbor Day, which was last Friday, was generally observed in this county by the schools or individuals. It is probable that the exceedingly dry weather interfered somewhat with the observance, but there is no doubt that such observance is needed when it is considered how the country—the low farming land in the valleys particularly—has been denuded of timber within the past few years. The sage advice, "Keep stickin' in a tree, Jock, it will be growin' while you're sleepin'," is much more valuable now than when it was first given. If the people are not wise enough to foresee the necessity of planting trees, that necessity will be forced upon them soon by the prevalence of windstorms and drouths, if we may believe the statements of those who understand the influence of forests or tree foliage upon climate.

TEACHERS' COUNTY INSTITUTE.

Program of Exercises and Other Announcements by Superintendent Zumbro.

The Forty-Second Annual Session of the Franklin County Teachers' Institute, will be held in Rosedale Opera House, Chambersburg, Pa., commencing Monday, November 11, at 1.30 p. m., and closing Friday, November 15, 1895.

Teachers, directors, patrons and friends of education are most cordially invited to be present.

INSTRUCTORS:—Dr. N. C. Schaeffer, State Superintendent of Public Instruction; Dr Byron W. King, King's School of Oratory, Pittsburg, Pa.; Dr. Andrew Thomas Smith, of West Chester Normal School; Dr. Geo. W. Hull, of Millersville Normal School; Prof. W. W. Deatrick, of Kutztown Normal School; Dr. G. M. D. Eckels, of C. V. S. N. S.; Prof. I. D. Gresh, of Milton, Pa.

TOPICS FOR TEACHERS:—"What Should be the Teacher's Aim?" B. A. Hoover, of Letterkenny; "The Successful Teacher," H. S. Kuhn, of Peters; "Morality and How to Teach it in Our Public Schools," J. S. Smith, Antrim; "A Stepping-stone to Higher Education," Geo. W. Middlekauff, of Waynesboro; "Public School Graduation," D. G. Hoover, of Washington.

DIRECTORS' DAY:—Thursday afternoon will be set apart specially for the discussion of topics relative to the Directors' work, and it is hoped that all the Directors of the county will be present. The following topics will be discussed: "Our Relative Educational Position Among the Counties of the State," S. Z. Hawbecker, Esq., of St. Thomas; "Some of the Difficulties We Encounter," George W. Atherton, Esq., of Chambersburg. The State Superintendent will address the Directors this session.

LECTURE COURSE:

MONDAY EVENING—"Artistic Recitals and Character Sketches," Dr. Byron W. King.

TUESDAY EVENING—"Pluck," Dr. Geo. W. Miller, of New York City.

WEDNESDAY EVENING—"Seeing the Elephant," Col. L. F. Copeland, of Harrisburg.

THURSDAY EVENING—"Old Ocean, Our Slave and Master," Dr. John B. DeMotte, of Cambridge, Mass.

Tickets will be on sale at the ticket office in the Opera House. Directors can secure complimentary tickets by making application to the County Superintendent.

MUSIC:—The music during the day sessions will be in charge of Prof. Gresh, who will also give instruction in music. Foltz's orchestra has been engaged to furnish music for the evening sessions.

RAILROAD ARRANGEMENTS:—Tickets for passengers traveling over the C. V. R. R., or any of its branches, in the county, will be sold at regular excursion rates for the week. Orders for excursion tickets over the W. M. R. R. can be had upon application to the County Superintendent.

ENROLLMENT:—Teachers will please purchase from the roll-keepers of the respective districts, a certificate of enrollment, which will entitle them to a teachers' season ticket. This certificate must be handed to the ticket agent. Full price will be expected for season tickets issued without the certificates. These certificates should be purchased before the opening of the institute.

Our corps of lecturers and instructors, we believe, has never been excelled. Let us show our interest in the profession by regular attendance upon the sessions of the institute. Let us make this institute the great Educational event of the year.

W. F. ZUMBRO,
County Superintendent.

Success of a New Creamery.

Contributed.

The Springs Dairy Co. which started a creamery at Guilford Springs, Pa., on the milk separator system, are now using over two thousand pounds of milk daily, with certainty to increase, notwithstanding the howl that went up against the system and the many arguments that were offered why it could not be made a success.

The Springs Dairy people said nothing and "sawed wood," so to speak, as they well knew that their dairy alone would make it profitable. Now, as it is, every farmer to the man, that has given it a fair and impartial trial is not only highly pleased but congratulates himself on getting the new enterprise in the neighborhood. The system makes a butter far superior to any other known and the product brings a higher price in the cities, it also makes more pounds of butter, the skimming or separation is so complete that from one-fourth to one-sixth more butter is made than can be made by hand skimming. The Springs Dairy Co., of which J. S. Ernst is treasurer, paid the farmers 20 cents per pound for butter last week to those who deliver their milk, a price rarely if ever before obtained from creameries in this vicinity at this season.

The company makes fancy print butter and ships direct to retail trade thus avoiding commission men, and as they get their special brands of fancy prints more established they will be able to pay still more.

Quite a number of farmers in the neighborhood are so encouraged with the new feature that they will put in more cows and give dairying more attention since grain raising has become less profitable.

The results are very gratifying to those interested, the pay roll having more than tripled itself each month, and success to the creamery is now beyond question.

AN OBSERVER.

Wedding Bells.

Wednesday evening, October 16, Frank M. Middlekauff manager of the Chambersburg steam laundry, was married to Miss Nellie Elser, daughter of Mrs. Ellen Elser, at the home of the bride's mother on King street extended. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. B. Shontz in the presence of a large company of the friends of the contracting parties, from Hagerstown, Lancaster and other points, besides a number of home friends. There were many presents, valuable, beautiful and useful.

Both the young people are deservedly popular and have the good wishes of all their acquaintances. After their return from their bridal tour they will reside in Chambersburg.

TOWN AND TOWNSHIP.

The Events of the County as Chronicled by "Review" Correspondents—Summary of the Week's News.

CONCORD.

Hamilton Robertson a prosperous merchant of Shippensburg, paid his mother a visit here last week.

Mrs. D. L. McDonald of Shiremanstown, spent last week with her mother, Mrs. Eliza Robertson.

Mr. Murphy and family, Chambersburg, are the guests of S. A. Johns.

Miss. Laura Miller left town to-day for Pittsburg, where she has secured a position.

Candidates McFerren and Elder made calls in town Monday.

Postmaster Skinner of Dry Run, was in town Monday.

A. C. McMullen and family visited relatives in Blacklog Valley last week.

Rev. F. W. Biddle and wife, of Lock Haven, are visiting Mrs. Biddle's father, Rev. John H. Little.

Alex. Orr, Philip McElheney and Arthur Little, attended the reunion of the Juniata veterans held in Mifflintown last week.

We are sorry to see that some thoughtless children are defacing the new school house by registering on the new building. "A word to the wise."

John Seibert an aged and respected citizen, died Monday morning, October 21. Mr. Seibert was an industrious citizen and will be greatly missed by his fellow townsmen. Interment in Concord cemetery Tuesday at 10 a. m. Mr. Seiecrt was in his 83rd year.

We would like to see the Stars and Stripes float over our new school house. Let some one make a move and others will follow. See if we can't teach our children patriotism.

SCOTLAND.

The society of the King's Daughters of the Lutheran church gave an oyster supper at the home of Mrs. John Kurtz on Saturday evening. A pleasant evening was spent with profit to the society.

John G. Youst, Esq., attended the Poor Directors State Convention in Philadelphia last week. Mr. Youst is erecting a handsome addition to his residence.

M. E. Batton's coach horses were greatly admired at the Hagerstown fair. They are certainly fine animals for the road and all other purposes for which horses can be used.

John Dunmire and Harry Strickler saw a man ten feet tall at the Hagerstown fair, but an investigation revealed the fact that he was on stilts. Many of our people attended the fair.

Rev. Cleffman has been holding a series of meetings at the U. B. church in Upper Strasburg. Mrs. Cleffman is visiting her parents and friends in York.

The cider-making season is about over. It has been a very busy one, and there is probably more cider and more apple-butter stored away this fall than for many years before.

Isaac Burkholder of this place will move to Chambersburg in the near future.

GREENWOOD.

The mountains at this place are on fire, whether by accident or design is not known; efforts have been made to extinguish the flames with partial success. Hunters fear it will interfere with the deer crop.

Public sale was made of the effects of Henry Spoonour, deceased, of Mount Union, last Saturday. The bidding was lively and articles brought fair prices.

James Rupert, Mount Union, returned home from Steelton where he has been at work, and tells of a disaster at that place that happened Saturday last. The heavy iron roof of one of the buildings fell, in killing one man and injuring five others, some severely and others slightly. No one from this county, so far as known, was hurt.

Mrs. Susan Norton, residing at the furnaces, last Friday met with a painful accident and sustained what is known in surgical parlance as "Barton's fracture" of the right wrist. Dr. W. E. Holland of Fayetteville, reduced the fracture and the patient is doing well. The doctor is kept pretty busy in this neighborhood these days. There is not so much sickness but most of his cases are accidents, incidental to a mountainous country and rough outdoor life.

The people here are beginning to feel the effects of the dry spell that has prevailed so long. Wells that have never been known to go dry are getting very low and the utmost economy in the use of water is being practiced.

Religious people of Fayetteville were much interested in a missionary meeting held at the Lutheran church at 10.30 a. m., last Sabbath. A native missionary and wife of Bombay, India, told of their conversion to christianity and how the christian religion is progressing in that country. The Rev. gentleman is pastor of a native church; both are fluent speakers and not only interested but instructed their hearers. The good people of this place gave the strangers a hearty welcome and something more substantial as well. The writer remembers having heard an old army chaplain once remark that this would be a much better world if people would take more of their own advice—no reflection is meant on the good people of this place, or the visitors from Bombay—but it would be applicable to some people the writer has met in other places.

PLEASANT HALL.

Mr. A. W. Hoover, of this place is having his well drilled deeper. Hope he will be successful in obtaining water as it is a scarcity in and around the Hall.

Miss Anna Kuhn and her brother Warren, have been spending a very pleasant time in Path Valley, visiting relatives and other friends at Willow Hill and Fannettsburg. They returned home Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. Abram Keefer have been on the sick list but are getting better again. They are a very estimable couple and are much liked by all who know them.

QUINCY.

D. B. Brown, on the William Harshman farm, a few days ago lost another fine young cow by choking in a wire that had been fastened to a pole at the straw stack in the barnyard. This is the second cow Mr. Brown lost this summer. We are very sorry that Mr. Brown is so unfortunate in losing his cattle stock.

Thursday, October 10, the wedding of John C. Gossert, near Blue Rock schoolhouse, to Miss Ada M. Sprenkle, oldest daughter of Oscar W. Sprenkle, at the Nunnery, took place at the residence of and by the Rev. W. C. Cremer, D. D., in Chambersburg. The bride is a young lady who has been a resident of Quincy township for nearly two years only. She is very prominent in society and a very hard-working, industrious young woman. The groom is a young man who has been born and raised in Quincy township. By occupation he is a blacksmith and as good a mechanic as there is in the county and strictly honest, perfectly sober and has always worked very hard. He is very highly regarded by all who know him and your correspondent joins in wishing him and his young wife a long and prosperous journey through life.

Mrs. Katie Heintzleman and Mrs. Lizzie A. Rock, Quincy, returned Monday of last week from Beaver Dam, Md., where they had been spending several days visiting friends and relatives and attending a love feast of the Old Order of German Baptist Brethren. They enjoyed their visit very much.—'Squire Geo. W. Middour and wife, Quincy, left Friday morning to visit friends and relatives in Adams county. We hope they may have a pleasant time.

The county commissioners last week appointed Paul J. Ritter, from Quincy township, state and county tax collector for that township. We believe Paul will make a good collector.

D. M. Wertz, Quincy, has his creamery pretty well under way. The building will be 18x20 feet and will be frame. Jacob Smetzer is the contractor for the carpenter work and John G. Rock was the contractor for the mason work.

Mrs. Margaret, widow of George Benedict, Mount Zion, is at present making preparations to build a new frame barn on the farm belonging to the heirs, at Small's mill, in place of the one destroyed by lightning a few months ago. The barn will be 44x58 feet. Jacob Smetzer is the contractor for the carpenter work.

John A. McCleary has about completed his dwelling house and is engaged in building a new frame stable, 18x20 feet. Jacob Smetzer is the contractor for the carpenter work and James G. Rock for the masonry.—John F. Smith, Fox Hill, last week erected two new long porches to his new dwelling house. David M. Miley did the carpenter work. Mr. Smith now has a very nice home.—B. F. Burger, Quincy, gave his dwelling house a fresh coat of paint, which improves the appearance of his property very much.—Levi C. Row put up a new wagon shed, 24x30 feet, within the past few weeks on his farm at Polk Hill, tenanted by E. C. Fitz. Jacob Smetzer was the contractor for the carpenter work and Jacob C. Monn for the masonry.

NORMAL NOTES.

What the Students Are Doing—Fine Improvements.

The State Normal School at Shippensburg began its Fall session September 2, under the most favorable prospects. The attendance is much larger than in any corresponding term in the school's history, and on account of this increase of students, the teaching force has been strengthened by the election of three additional instructors. The Senior class consists of one hundred and twenty-four members, and in order to keep the classes within proper limits, it has been divided into four sections. A number of students are taking advantage of the course in typewriting and stenography, which has been recently established, and which is in charge of a competent instructor. The Scientific class is composed of special students and former graduates in the elementary course.

The Normal Reading Room, which is open daily to the students, has been recently supplied with an abundance of papers, journals and magazines. The ranks of the Y. W. C. A. and the Y. M. C. A. have been increased by the addition of new members.

The work of grading the campus and beautifying the grounds around the buildings is nearing completion, and when finished, will add very much to their appearance.

The following lecture course has been arranged for the winter: Concerts by the Arion Lady Quartette of Chicago, and the New York Male Quartette; lecture by Col. George W. Bain of Louisville, Kentucky and Judge Alfred Ellison of Indiana; impersonations by Byron W. King of Pittsburg. The first concert will be given on the 28th of October.

The students have re-organized the Athletic Association by electing officers for the present school year. Two football teams have been selected, and new suits have been purchased for both teams. The interest in athletics is increasing, and the prospects for strong teams are very encouraging. Games have been scheduled with the Carlisle Athletic Club, Dickinson Preparatory, Chambersburg Academy, and Mercersburg College.

Eighteen counties are represented at the Normal this term. Franklin county's representatives are, boarding students: Messrs. I. A. Weisner, A. I. Snowberger, H. B. Hege, J. S. Rhodes, H. C. Whitmore, A. D. Martin, E. E. Shoemaker, H. A. Burns, E. Sheely, A. S. McDowell, H. F. Stine, J. S. Wolff, and W. C. Donnelly; Misses Susie A. Brinley, Jennie Campbell, Ella Miller, Emma Disert, Mame Hoffman, Alcesta Sellers, Edith Bollinger, Wealthy Heintzelman, Helen L. Crilly, Virginia Rhone, Minnie E. Cline, Nellie M. Snoke, and Ida M. Blair. Day students: Messrs. Geo. Varner, Chas. E. Roller, Frank Lehman, J. W. Myers, B. H. Smith, F. H. Smith, J. B. Wineman, Chas. E. Snoke, Misses Rebecca Ruby, Alice Hager, Fannie, L. Gable.

Franklin County ranks second in the number of students, Cumberland county being first.

MYSTIC.

Regular Term of Orphans' Court.

The fourth regular term of orphans' court was held Tuesday. In the matter of Daniel S. Reisher vs. Elmira Grove King the court refused to open the judgment. The defendant took a rule for a new trial. The rule was discharged by the court.

In the estate of Isaac Rife in regard to the exceptions filed to the report of J. W. Rodenhafer, Esq., the report was ordered to be recommitted as the matter is very important, and that additional testimony may be taken.

William H. Keller, Lancaster, was appointed to sell the real estate of Rev. Benj. F. Schneck, dec'd.

J. C. Rankin, Esq., was granted an order as trustee, to sell the real estate of Mary Ann Straly, dec'd.

J. C. McCleary was appointed inspector in the First ward, Chambersburg in place of J. E. McCleary, resigned.

In the case of Daniel Snively vs. the borough of Waynesboro, rule for new trial was discharged, as counsel did not press the motion.

Store Robbed in Newville.

On Thursday night or early Friday morning, thieves forced their way into the general store of P. A. Garber, Newville, and carried away a lot of clothing valued at from $250 to $400. A lot of clothing was left lying outside of the store which is evidence that the party was scared away. Mr. Garber has been searching diligently for the thieves and has offered a heavy reward for their capture and identification.

A WORD IN PASSING.

Town and County Briefs With a Bit of Comment—Happenings of the Week and a Forecast of Coming Events.

J. Beam Wingert's school, Stoufferstown picnicked in the woods near Edenville Saturday.

The first entertainment of the Y. M. C. A. course by the Swedish Quartet, Tuesday evening, highly pleased the large audience present.

The Directors of the Poor of this county and their treasurer, S. M. Shillito, attended the convention of Poor Directors in Philadelphia last week.

There will be no preaching in the Reformed church at Fannettsburg next Sunday on account of the absence of the pastor, Rev. G. S. Gill, at Synod.

The 21st annual Sabbath school convention of the upper district of Cumberland county is being held in Rehoboth church near Leesburg today and tomorrow.

Over eight inches of snow fell at Oswego, N. Y., on Sunday night. Many trees were broken with the weight of the snow. In some northern sections the roads in the forests were badly obstructed by the broken trees and branches.

The Geiser Company of Waynesboro, have decided not to employ any persons who become intoxicated. Any now in the employ of the company, if seen under the influence of liquor or shall absent themselves from duty on account of drinking, will be summarily discharged.

Mainly through the efforts of B. F. Johns the 49th Penna. Regiment, of which he was a member, and which held its late reunion at Huntingdon, will hold the next at Chambersburg. The Department Encampment being held here will be the means of bringing many regimental reunions to our town next year.

The explosion of benzine caused a fire that for a few moments was quite threatening, in Harry Reisner's jewelry store, Hagerstown, Tuesday. A boy was using the fluid to clean parts of a clock. After the air had become impregnated he struck a match to light a lantern when the explosion followed. The fire was soon extinguished.

The Junior Epworth Leaguers of the M. E. church, numbering from sixty to seventy children, in charge of their president, Mrs. C. B. Dyson and several others, took an outing Saturday. They went in two large farm wagons to the North mountain, near Edenville, and spent the day there most enjoyably, gathering nuts and having a good time generally.

The protracted meeting in the M. E. church is still in progress. There have already been over twenty accessions to the church and the interest is maintained. Communion services were held Sunday morning and evening. Dr. Evans, Presiding Elder, preached very ably and impressively Sunday evening and Monday evening. Quarterly conference was held Monday evening.

Andrew J. Mellott, tenant on the farm of Dr. W. F. Trout, McConnellsburg, left home at 3 o'clock Monday morning of last week, since which time he has not been heard of. He said to his wife that he was going to return an applebutter kettle that they had borrowed the Saturday before. He dressed himself in his best clothes before leaving. No cause is known for his sudden disappearance.

Postmaster Houser moved into the new postoffice building Saturday night and on Monday morning was ready to hand out mail to the earliest callers. The office is complete in all its appointments and is a model of neatness and convenience. It is in fact, the nicest postoffice in the Cumberland Valley and is admired for its outward appearance and its internal completeness, by all who see it.

Capt. N. W. Kuhn of McCullough Post, G. A. R., Mercersburg, has been appointed Assistant Inspector-at-Large of the Posts in the district composed of Franklin and Fulton counties. Tuesday night he inspected Housum Post in this place. He has detailed several other comrades to inspect most of the Posts in the district. He will perform that duty in two or three others yet. There are seven Posts in Franklin and four in Fulton county.

Dr. Curriden has sold the North Point Pharmacy to Cressler and Keefer, the South Main street druggists. Dr. Walter Crawford has charge of this place of business and is assisted by Orville Shirey who goes from the South Main street store. E. Lacy Speer who had assisted Dr. Curriden has become local editor of the People's Register. The stock in the new store will be enlarged and improvements will be made. Dr. Curriden has resumed active practice of medicine and is making his home with his mother and sisters on West Market street.

The Western Pennsylvania Lutheran Synod met in York Thursday of last week and adjourned Tuesday. The number of delegates was nearly 100. The total receipts for the year was about $18,000. The Synod assumed $13,000 of the debt incurred in improving the Theological Seminary at Gettysburg. The President, Rev. W. T. Freas, complained that the churches did not support the seminary as they should. The receipts for this source were $400 short of the apportionments. Rev. H. F. Kroh of the Second Lutheran church, Chambersburg, was re-elected statistical secretary. The next session of the Synod will be held October, 1896, in Gettysburg.

Among the premiums announced to Franklin county exhibitors at the Hagerstown fair last week are the following: S. G. Hollinger, Waynesboro, Guernsey cattle; T. M. Nelson, Chambersburg, Holstein-Fresian, Yorkshire hogs, American Merino sheep. Prizes for horses were awarded to Frank Tolhelm and H. D. Foreman, Waynesboro; J. P. Rahauser, Greencastle; M. E. Battin, and J. A. Etter, Scotland; D. M. Niswander, Welsh Run. There were a number of other exhibitors of live stock, machinery, vehicles, etc. Milton Crawford, Fayetteville, was one of the finest looking aids to the chief marshall.

Samuel Johnston, tenant on the Bellevue farm, north of Hagerstown, the Globe says, had his well cleaned by his son, Harry K. Johnston, on Saturday. During the process of cleaning a small tin bucket, rusted and ready to fall to pieces, was found. In the bucket was a pound of butter and several pounds of meat. The butter looked as fresh and pure as the day it was made and the meat was also well preserved. This is supposed to be the same butter and meat which Andrew Summers accidentally dropped into the well about eight years ago.

PERSONAL PARAGRAPHS.

Items of Interest About Your and Our Friends and Those Whom We All know.

Morris Staines, of Richmond, has been quite ill with typhoid fever but is slowly recovering.

John Brechbill is ill with typhoid fever at the home of his brother Abram, near Waynesboro.

Col. W. D. Dixon, St. Thomas, was a profitable caller at the REVIEW office Monday. He is waiting patiently for the close of the dry season.

J. B. Wineman, merchant and farmer, Fannettsburg, was in town on business Monday. Though quite busy as he always is when in Chambersburg, he took time to call and have his subscription dated well up into 1896.

Dr. Bruce Nevin, of Grafton, West Va., has been spending some time with his parents in Waynesboro and in Warren township, where he formerly practiced medicine. The doctor likes his practice and his home among the mountains of West Virginia.

Dr. Maclay and W. S. Clarke left Saturday on a two weeks' trip south. They spent Sunday in Washington, D. C. They will spend some days at the Atlanta Exposition and will, on their way home, stop at a number of points including Richmond, Va., and other cities.

Wednesday of last week William V. Shaffer, a disabled veteran of Fannettsburg, took his two little boys, Jesse Roy and Ralph Elmer, to the Chester Springs orphan school. Mr. Shaffer was very favorably impressed with the school, and its management by Superintendent Smith.

Rev. G. C. Erb, pastor of the Reformed church, McConnellsburg, was a pleasant caller at the REVIEW office Saturday. He spent Sunday with his parents in Westminster, Md., and is now attending the sessions of Potomac Synod of his church at Frederick, Md. Rev. Erb is serving his congregation very acceptably.

President Cleveland and most of his cabinet left Washington Monday and went to Atlanta where two days was spent. The party returns to Washington to-day. Mr. Cleveland received marked attention from the Mayor and other city authorities and from President Collyer and others connected with the great exposition.

M. L. Rinedollar, of the Geiser company, Waynesboro, was an agreeable caller at the REVIEW office Tuesday morning. On account of a lack of water the Geiser works were compelled to shut down most of their departments last week. They are taking advantage of this enforced idleness by making their annual invoice.

S. H. Parson, Waynesboro, after subscribing for the REVIEW, went to Fulton county, where he spent a portion of last week hunting. He promised, if successful, to leave some of the trophies of the chase with us on his return. As he did not return this way, he must have shared all his game with other friends before he reached us.

W. C. Conner and W. T. Boyd, of St. Thomas, were pleasant callers at the REVIEW office Friday. Mr. Conner has sold to Mr. Boyd the Union Hotel property in St. Thomas. They were in town having the transfer completed. Mr. Conner has purchased of Dr. Strock in the same place, the house and lot known as the John Woodall property. Both transactions were on private terms.

George W. Shull, son of D. J. Shull of the Market street Marble Works, was married in Baltimore, Wednesday, October 23, to Miss Carrie Shetter of this place. Rev. A. S. Hartman, D. D., performed the ceremony. The groom is telegraph operator at the W. M. and C. V. railroad crossing in Hagerstown. The newly married couple are very estimable young people and start out in life with bright prospects for a happy future, which their many friends heartily wish them.

Ex-County Commissioner J. S. Snively, of Antrim township, was a business visitor to Chambersburg Saturday and paid his respects to the REVIEW office. He has a warm regard for his comrades who served in the late war, but like many others, considers it a great misfortune that there is not some provision to regulate the payment of pensions to those who really deserve them but cannot resist the appetite for drink which causes them to thus worse than waste their money as soon as they receive it. He has no doubt that ample provision will be made to take care of the delegates and all other soldiers who shall attend the Department Encampment here next June.

John A. Neil, Spring Run, was in town Saturday on business and called at the REVIEW office to settle his subscription. He informs us that not only is the surface of the ground very dry in his section of Path Valley, but many of the wells and springs have failed. He is digging a well and has gone down a considerable distance but has discovered no signs of running water. He proposes to go deeper, however, in the hope that when he does find water it will be in abundant quantity. Mr. Neil was accompanied by Elmer E. Kell, Shade Gap.

Geo. C. Austin, Esq., who has rapidly and deservedly risen to eminence at the Bar of New York City, has been nominated for the legislature by the Republicans of his district, the 21st, and has an excellent prospect of being elected. Mr. Austin is a graduate of Columbia law school and has for some years been an active member of a prominent law firm in the city. He is a brother of P. R. Austin of the firm of Austin, Dyson & Co., and a son of Major Rowland Austin of Saluvia, Fulton county. Mr. Austin has many friends in Franklin and Fulton counties who would cheerfully support his candidacy if they were in his district.

A Mistaken Nimrod.

Saturday Harry McKee, near Keefer's store borrowed a gun from his neighbor Poe, went towards the mountain gunning and returned in about two hours with seven fine turkeys. His wife remarked that they looked like tame turkeys. Mr. McKee thought not. While they were examining the fowls our old friend Harry McCleary, came walking up. He looked at the pile of game and remarked, "Harry, you have shot about all my turkeys." Such was the fact. The matter was adjusted in some amicable way. When Mr. McKee goes hunting again he will be more careful in the selection of his game.

Officers Installed.

District Deputy J. W. Gordon, on Saturday evening installed the following officers of Path Valley Lodge No. 123, at Roxbury. N. G., H. D. Glass; V. G., W. J. Nichols; Treasurer, J. H. Reed; Asst. Sec., J. H. Neff; R. S. to N. G., W. G. Watson; L. S., H. S. Warren; R. S. to V. G., W. N. Seilhamer; L. S., Clark Warren; Conductor, S. H. Reed; Warden, J. A. Mills; R. S. S., A. Maxwell; L. S. S., J. Franklin; O. G., James Warren; I. G., H. L. Hamilton. The secretary is J. H. Gilbert; Representative to Grand Lodge, H. C. Cover.

A MARYLAND TRAGEDY.

A Jealous Husband Shoots His Wife, Then Kills Himself.

The Hagerstown Globe of Monday tells of a horrible tragedy that occurred at Eakle's Mills, Md., on Sunday evening. William Landis living a mile south of the mills, shot his wife in the head and then shot himself. He died almost instantly but his wife still lives and it is thought she will recover.

The couple lived together unhappily, it is said, ever since they were married. The double tragedy occurred about 8 o'clock. The first shot was fired at his wife. The bullet struck her in the forehead, grazed her skull and glanced upward without causing a fracture. He then pointed the revolver at his own head, pulled the trigger and a bullet went crashing through his skull into his brain.

Mrs. Landis was sitting on a rocking chair and Landis went to where she was, sat upon her lap, pulled a revolver, pointed the barrel against her forehead and fired. Just as he fired Mrs. Landis threw back her head. The bullet split the skin on her forehead in three directions and plowed an ugly furrow up to the roots of her hair and then dropped on the floor. A second only elapsed between the time he shot his wife and himself. His aim at his own head was more certain and he tumbled off her lap and expired.

Mrs. Landis was not even rendered unconscious. In the dark she groped for her bonnet, which hung up in the room, but, after making a circuit of the room, went out of the door without finding it. The walls were blood-stained from her hands. She got a rag and pressed it to the wound and started over the fields to Jerry Snyder's, an eighth of a mile away. She was taken into Mr. Snyder's house where she told the story and was put to bed. Dr. Newton Hendricks was summoned and he dressed the wound. Several men hurried to the house where Landis was found dead with the revolver in his hand.

Jealousy is said to be the cause of the terribly tragedy, though the people of that vicinity say Mrs. Landis's life was above suspicion.

Landis married a widow, Mrs. Keefauver, who, before her first marriage, was a Miss Reel, sister of Jacob Reel.

Two children were born to Mrs. Landis during her marriage with Jacob Keefauver. One son was born during her marriage with Landis and is now aged about sixteen years. When she married Landis she was a grandmother. She is fifty-eight years old—twenty years older than her husband.

Care of the Public Health.

The Bureau of Health in the Department of Public Safety, Philadelphia, is beginning to attract the earnest attention of physicians throughout the state and especially in localities where malignant contagious diseases are most prevalent, particularly those arising from bacteria or bacilli. The Bureau of Health is now and has been for some months making tests to ascertain the presence or absence of certain diseases propagated from bacilli.

For instance, when there are symptoms of diphtheria a test is made to ascertain whether there is a diphtheritic membrane in the throat or nose. A portion of this substance is taken and sent to the laboratory of the bureau and placed in a "culture tube" where it is developed by heat in an incubator, and in a few hours it can be known whether the foreign substance or exudate is diphtheritic membrane or not. When this fact is ascertained the physician can treat his patient intelligently and effectively, while the disease is still in its incipiency. Tests are also made to ascertain whether the bacilli or bacteria of other diseases is present.

We cannot go into detail as to the reports made by the bureau to the physicians in regard to the nature of the diseases, but the facts are readily determined beyond doubt and reported at once.

The point is, then, would it not be well to provide for the public health of the people of the entire state by having a law enacted creating similar bureaus of health throughout the state so that all sections could be reached readily? There could not be the same facility in furnishing the diseased membrane or substance to the bureau from rural districts that there is in the larger towns and cities, but many ordinary towns and all but the remote rural sections could be reached in a short time, in these days of the telegraph and the ubiquitous telephone.

Just now certain sections of this county are afflicted with diphtheria and typhoid fever in a very virulent form, and frequently the presence of the disease is not detected, because its effects are not apparent, until it has reached an incurable stage. In the meantime those in the early stages of diphtheria especially, as for instance, school children mingle together in the schoolroom where all the opportunities for contagion are favorable. The same is true of the home where the conditions are often the same.

We are aware that a number of our progressive physicians are interested, and deeply, too, in this matter, and it is to be hoped that through the medical profession and especially in wide-awake medical societies, the matter may be agitated so that something effective in this direction may be done by our next legislature.

The importance of this matter is very pressing now in the vicinity of St. Thomas as diphtheria is very prevalent there, not only among children but among older persons as well. Several persons over fifty years of age have been sufferers from the disease. In these cases, however, it was not so malignant as it is among children.

At the meeting of the Directors of the Poor of the State in Philadelphia last week, this matter of preserving the public was brought to their attention in the hope that something might be done through these officers in the different counties.

The Meade Statue.

Says the Gettysburg Compiler: The statue of Major General George G. Meade has been put together and is a fine work of art, in some respects surpassing that of Gen. Hancock, recently completed. The General is represented as looking intently in the direction of Pickett's charge, holding his field glasses in the right hand and his cap in the left, the bridle rein hanging gracefully. The horse, a magnificent figure, was modelled from a descendent of the fine animal presented to President Grant by the Khedive of Egypt. Another of the granite blocks which will constitute the pedestal arrived last week, but the material is not all here yet, hence the bronze work rests on the foundation. Artist H. B. Brown designed the statue.

THEY WANT OUR ORE.

Prospects of Reopening Path Valley Ore Mines—Railroad Extension May Be Built.

A gentleman representing the Phœnixville Iron Company was in Path Valley last week and the early part of this week examining the quality of ore from Richmond to the old Carrick banks near Fannettsburg, a distance of eight or nine miles along the Tuscarora mountain. Deputy Sheriff James M. Jones accompanied him on the lower end, and W. M. Witherow took him over the upper ore fields.

It is well known that the Phœnixville Company is one of the largest in the state. They have been for years manufacturing a superior quality of iron and to do this, have had to use a good deal of foreign ore; and now that their own fields are becoming exhausted they are compelled to look elsewhere for a supply of native ore. They believe that native ore can be had which will answer as well as the foreign ore they have been using, and it is with this view that they have sent their man to the valley. He makes maps and surveys of the location of the different bodies, many of which lie on or near the surface of the ground. He was specially pleased with the outcrop on the lands of Harrison Jones. It is unusually pure and of very fine quality and evidently is suited to take the place of the foreign ore. If the ore proves to be the quality desired, the gentleman says it will be a small matter to build a railroad extension eight or ten miles to reach it, and if the ore is used this will be done.

He inquired carefully as to the price of land and other matters, which left the impression that he was not merely on a wild goose chase. It will be more advantageous in many respects to use native ore than foreign, and it is believed that Path Valley will furnish the quality desired. Even if there shall be a little more waste in smelting—and it is not certain that there will be—the Path Valley ore is so near and so easily mined, that everything is in favor of its development.

As stated in the REVIEW some weeks ago, the iron manufactured from these ores in Carrick and Richmond furnaces in the former days when the small furnaces were not yet crowded to the wall, was of the best quality and brought the highest prices in nearly all markets.

It would be a good thing for the owners of ore lands in the valley if their deposits could be developed; and with the prices of iron rising because of increased use and exhaustion of mines in other sections, it seems probable that before long this great mineral wealth of our people will be made available.

CHURCH DEDICATED.

A Large Congregation—Interesting Services—Hospitable People.

The new U. B. church near Stephen Keefer's, in Horse Valley, was dedicated Sunday by Presiding Elder J. P. Anthony, assisted by Rev. Ely, Chambersburg and Rev. Harkins, Dry Run. The sermon and all the other services were very impressive. The congregation was very large, including people from every section of the valley, from Path Valley, Roxbury, Strasburg and other places.

An unusual announcement was made: It was that no collection would be asked for as there was no debt to meet. Stephen Keefer with the assistance of others had quietly furnished all the means and every dollar was paid or provided for.

The building is handsome and commodious, large enough to meet the probable needs of the congregation for many years. The materials used in its construction are of the best and the workmanship excellent.

All the people living in the vicinity of the church threw open their doors and invited the visitors to partake of their hospitality, which they did and enjoyed it. Everybody was entertained bountifully, and all of the many teams were well cared for.

Mr. Keefer who for many years has been one of the most prominent members of the congregation is a successful business man and a practical, consistent christian as well. For many years his house has been the preacher's home and many are the visitors he has fed and lodged with a welcome that added much to the enjoyment of his hospitality. Though well up in years he is still quite active and cheery and is one of the kind of men whom all like to know.

Memorial U. B. church at Orrstown was also dedicated Sunday, the dedicatory service being held in the evening and conducted by Bishop Barnaby assisted by Revs. I. C. Weidler, Huber and Hamilton. Large congregations attended both morning and evening services. The cost of the building which was about $1200, including the bell, was all met before it was dedicated. The audience room is 30x40 feet, not including the vestibule or pulpit recess. It is a neat, comfortable structure well adapted to the needs of the congregation.

District Epworth League Convention.

The fourth annual convention of the Epworth League, Central Penna. conference, met in Huntingdon October 15, and closed the evening of the 17th. It was the largest and most interesting convention ever held in the district. It is impossible to give even a synopsis of the work. Among the notable ministers present were Bishop Ninde and Rev. George Elliott, Philadelphia. A large number of ministers of the conference were also in attendance. Mrs. F. H. Stouffer and H. C. White were the delegates from Chambersburg chapter. Mrs. Stouffer read an excellent paper: "The Epworth League a Promoter of Things Spiritual." Its purpose was to incite to individual work for the good of the worker as well as for those in whose behalf the work is being done; to have a proper conception of individual responsibility.

One of the most impressive addresses was that of Dr. Elliott on "The Place of Young People in the Church." He urged the active participation of the young in every department of church work; they should be on the official board while some of the sainted aged should have a foretaste of their eternal rest. "Put the young to the front and the aged into the Amen corner." His climax had a wonderful effect on his audience and his "closing words were almost lost in hallelujahs."

Tuesday evening a kindly greeting was sent to the survivors of the Forty-ninth Penna. Regiment, who were then holding their fourteenth annual reunion in the opera house.

The great sermon of the occasion was by Bishop Ninde on Thursday. This was followed by a spirited testimony meeting. The convention was closed with a consecration meeting, which left a profound impression on all present.

A NOTABLE FLAG RAISING.

Old Glory Raised Over Flickinger's School House in Path Valley.

The people of Path Valley and especially those in the vicinity of Willow Hill, are noted for there progressiveness and this is particularly true in matters calling for patriotic demonstrations, as is evidenced by the great crowd of people that were present on Saturday to witness the formal flag-raising at Flickinger's school house near Willow Hill.

While all the people are wide-awake, up-to-date folks, the organization of Patriotic Sons of America at Willow Hill, usually takes the lead in public demonstrations as they did on Saturday last.

In response to invitations of the organization previously given by public announcements by posters and otherwise, a large crowd of people had assembled at Willow Hill by noon. About half-past one o'clock a procession, including the P. O. S. of A. organizations of Willow Hill, Dry Run, Burnt Cabins, Fort Loudon, Elliott Post, G. A. R., Odd Fellows, Sons of Veterans, school children and young ladies with flags was formed and marched to Flickinger's school house. Then came a number of buggies, carriages, etc., containing a large number of people, all of whom were greatly interested in the day's proceedings. Arriving at the school house sixteen young ladies gave a very prettily executed drill, under the direction of McGinley Shearer

After music by the ladies and by the Fannettsburg band, Rev. Ash, of Burnt Cabins, formally presented the flag to the Metal District School Board in a very appropriate speech. J. Mc. Wilhelm, President of the Board, accepted the flag in one of the happy speeches for which he is noted. After the exercises, Hon. A. Nevin Pomeroy, on behalf of the P. O. S. of A. delivered a very appropriate address. He was followed by Irvin C. Elder, Esq., after exercises by the school. J. H. Light, Esq., was the last speaker on the occasion. The exercises by the school were participated in by the following school children: Annie Crouse, Jennie Shearer, Myra Sharpe, Helen Welker, Marela Wilson, May Brenize, Bessie Rice, Frances Alexander, Jessie Alexander, Crete McCurdy, Nettie Miller, Clara Sharpe, Myrtle Shearer, Maggie Ostler, Ray and Grace Worthington, Annie Steck, Elsie Fleming, Mary Steck, Harry Stenger, Otis Gury, Carson Brown, Archie Burke. Crouse Gury. All of whom acquitted themselves most creditably. The young ladies who took part in the drill referred to above were: Misses Ella Sharpe, Ivy Kuhn, Grace Shearer, Ella Rice, Alice Welker, Cora Brown, Bessie Brown, Nettie Miller, Myrtle Shearer, Mary Wolff, Lucretia McCurdy, Clara Sharpe, Nora Brenize, Annie McCurdy, Mary Shearer, Nellie Welker.

Amos Welker presided ably and gracefully and much of the success of the occasion is due to his efforts and those of the other members of the committee having the affair in charge, who were M. L. Tice, James McCurdy, William Rice and McGinley Shearer. Of course our old friend "Joe" McCurdy was there making himself useful and pleasant on every hand.

In the evening there was a festival, which, notwithstanding the frosty air, was well attended and patronized.

The people of Willow Hill and vicinity have reason to congratulate themselves on the big day they had. Such demonstrations must have a beneficial effect upon the communities in which they are held and especially upon the young, who will never forget them; and though they may at the time be too young to comprehend the significance of them, they will do so by and by and will, therefore, be the better citizens.

DEATH'S DOINGS.

Those Who Have Passed to the Great Beyond—The Death Record In Franklin County and Elsewhere.

Emanuel E. Byers died Friday evening, October 19, at his home on the southern borough limits of Chambersburg after an illness extending over some time, though he was only confined to his bed about two weeks. His age was 61 years, 2 months and 6 days. He leaves a widow and three daughters by a former marriage, and two sons by the second marriage. The daughters are: Mrs. Edward Nitterhouse, Chambersburg; Mrs. Alfred Mellinger, Greencastle, and Mrs. Emory Snyder, Hamilton township. The sons residing with their mother are, William H. Byers, aged 21 years and Harry S., aged 10. He also leaves a brother Henry, and two sisters, Mrs. Herny S. Miller, Guilford township and Mrs. Stabler, Steelton.

Mr. Byers was a member of Housum Post, G. A. R., having served in Company E. 158th Penna regiment, and was one of the most popular members of the Post. He was also a member of the Golden Eagles, Red Men, Mystic Circle and the Equitable Aid Union.

He had worked for William Heyser at the Hollowell paper mills for 24 years; more recently he had worked for Aug. Wolf & Co., until his health failed him entirely.

He was married to Miss Louisa J. McDonald of Fannettsburg, in 1857 and she died in 1868. He next married Miss Mary E. Mellinger, Cumberland county, who survives him.

He was a member of the First Lutheran church, and died in the full hope of everlasting life.

His funeral took place Monday afternoon and was conducted by his pastor, Rev. E. H. Leisenring, and W. C. Schæffer, D. D. The Golden Eagles, the Red Men and Housum Post G. A. R. attended the funeral in their respective bodies, each order conducting its own burial service. The procession was quite a large one. Interment in Cedar Grove cemetery.

The widow and children are very grateful for the help and sympathy of many friends in the hour of their great sorrow.

Mrs. Susan Fleming, the mother of Mrs. Joshua Sharpe of this place, died in Harrisburg, Saturday, after a long illness, aged 65 years: She has two sons, David and George R., in Harrisburg.

Mrs. Emma, wife of David Painter, died Monday night at their home, West King street, after several weeks' illness. Her age was 29 years. She leaves two children and her husband to mourn her loss. Her funeral took place to-day (Thursday.) Interment in Cedar Grove Cemetery.

Store Sold.

Frank Deck, the West Market street grocer, will dispose of his business within a few weeks to Henry Martin and Samuel R. Grove. Impaired health is his reason for selling. Mr. Deck has been a successful and accommodating business man. It is believed that his successors will maintain the present reputation of the business stand.

THE STATE ENCAMPMENT

Of the Grand Army of the Republic to Be Held in Chambersburg.

It is now definitely settled that the next encampment of the G. A. R., Department of Pennsylvania, will be held in Chambersburg in June next. Our town was selected by the last Department encampment at Williamsport, and Commander Cumings has stated recently that no change of location is thought of.

It is an honor to Chambersburg and the Cumberland Valley to have this historic town selected as the place where the veteran survivors of the Union army, now residing in Pennsylvania, may meet and greet one another, and this honor is appreciated by the people of our town and valley. There is no fear nor reason for fear that there will be lack of entertainment or want of welcome for all who shall attend the encampment. No other town of its size in Pennsylvania can boast of larger or better hotel accommodations. No other town in the state will furnish more open doors into private houses in which all who cannot find accommodations in hotels or those who prefer private houses, will be welcomed, fed and lodged.

No other town in the North can furnish so exciting or tragic chapter in the war history of the country as Chambersburg—not even Gettysburg—though it was part of a battlefield. Its location in the heart of the Cumberland Valley is delightful. The valley itself is a veritable garden of the richest fertility. The proximity of historical battlefields—Gettysburg, Antietam, Harper's Ferry, Winchester—and their accessibility over lines of railroad threading through picturesque scenery, the fattest of lands, by peaceful, happy, comfortable homes—all these combine to make it the place where the old soldiers will delight to spend a week in reunions, greetings and sight-seeing.

At the meeting of Housum Post, Tuesday evening a number of committees were named—they having been suggested to the Post by the Ways and Means Committee—who will have charge of the various arrangements and preparations for the encampment. And there is no doubt that every arrangement and preparation will be perfected; no detail will be forgotten; nothing will be left undone that will contribute in any way to the success of the encampment.

It is the desire of Housum Post that the other Posts in the valley, and especially those in the county shall also contribute in whatever way they can to the success of the occasion.

Other announcements will be made from time to time as the work of preparation progresses.

It is pleasant to note the absence of any expressions of discouragement by any of our people. All are pleased that the town is to be thus honored and all will join in making the welcome of the veteran visitors a royal one.

Recollections.

EDITOR REVIEW:—Your notice of the installation of the officers of grand old Columbus Lodge, I. O. O. F., calls to mind a sad recollection of its noble membership when I became an initiate and entered its sacred portals over fifty years ago—in 1842 or '43, I think. With me as initiates were Lewis Gilbert, a shoemaker of McConnellsburg, and Dr. Byerly of Fayetteville. The leading members of the lodge were John Mull, Charles Hart, Isaac H. McCauley, Daniel O. Gehr, Denton Gehr, Col. McGeehan, John Jeffries, D. K. Wunderlich, and many others whose names I cannot now remember, but they were all as noble a band of men as ever graced any community or society. They have now all—all, passed through the valley of the shadow of death, to join the grand encampment of the "just made perfect"—to wear a brighter regalia than human hands ever devised, and I am here yet—waiting, ah, yes; only waiting the call and the password, to join the noble band once more.

A GALLANT REGIMENT.

More Than 60 Per Cent. of Its Members Died of Disease Or Wounds—Two Of Whom Were Among the Writer's Friends.

In a recent issue of The Semi-Weekly News, Huntingdon, Pa., appears the roll of the members of Co. D. 49th Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, that served so heroically in the war of the rebellion. The roll as given in the Semi-Weekly News is the list of members of the original company D. prepared by Robt. S. Westbrook, of Huntingdon, secretary of the Regimental Association. As published, the roll gives 93 names; of these 62 were either killed or wounded or died in the hospital or were mustered out by reason of wounds or other disabilities.

Of the members of this company the writer was acquainted with only two and they were brothers, and might have served as among the brightest examples of courage in the ancient days when the history of Rome furnished the most conspicuous examples of individual heroism, in the contest for the possession of the bridge across the Tiber, or when the three brothers in either army, the Horatii and the Curiatii decided the gauge of battle, the former trio of the Romans conquering the latter trio of their opponents, thus deciding the contest in favor of the Roman arms.

When the war begun these two brothers had not yet developed into physical, muscular manhood, but they had all of human courage that could be known They feared not privation, danger or death. As has been the case with brothers in many other families, they had a personal dispute which ended in a trial of physical strength in which the older and stronger was the victor, only because of his superior physical strength. The younger brooded over his defeat for a few days, then, without saying goodby to his parents, he went and enlisted in Co. D. 49th Penna. Regt. The older brother being consumed with remorse, when he heard what the younger had done, repented sorely of his part in the difficulty, and said to his mother that he would go with and take care of the younger brother and protect him with his own life.

So it was, the enlistment of the younger brother bears date of August 31, 1861, and of the older brother September 21, 1861, just 22 days apart. They slept, messed, marched and fought side by side until in the battle of Cold Harbor the older was wounded, receiving a shot in the leg which disabled him from marching farther. After he was thus wounded and while unable to move, one of the enemy came up to him with fixed bayonet and demanded his surrender; the wounded boy, scarcely of age, but with the fierceness of battle pulsating through his veins, clubbed his musket and dealt his assailant a blow that sunk the hammer of his gun into the brain of his antagonist who fell dead at his feet without a moan. Then our brave boy forgetful of the pain of his wound, stood at bay waiting for, and expecting attacks from others of the enemy, ready to deal to others the same punishment he had given the man to whom he would not surrender.

The tide of battle ebbed and passed by and he tried to get within reach of an ambulance; but there was no one to help him. The skulkers had all gone to the rear and the heroes were still at the front; so dragging his wounded leg, and using his gun for a crutch he turned back to find an ambulance. Reaching a stream with marshy shores, he asked a comrade to help him across. The cowardly creature who, if living, is doubtless receiving a big pension today, refused his help, and our boy of the 49th, was compelled to drag himself across the swamp, and there lay exhausted, covered with mud until a member of the ambulance corps found him and had him conveyed to the rear.

After his wound was partly healed our hero returned to the ranks; and side by side the brothers fought to the end of the war, the older refusing a commission which was tendered him; and they returned to their home in Fort Littleton, Fulton county. Both married estimable young women. In a very few years the wife of the elder died, leaving to his care an infant daughter who is now occupying one of the most useful positions women and only true women can fill.

The younger came home and also married the young woman of his choice. After a few years of happiness with his wife, and after two children, bright, sturdy boys, had been born to them, he lay down and died, leaving his widow and two orphans to mourn his untimely death. The widow still lives and finds great consolation in the affection and sturdy manhood of her two children now grown to be stalwart, honorable men.

The elder married again and reared a family of children, all of whom with his widow, hold him in affectionate remembrance; for he died after a brief illness, February 28, 1894, seemingly in the vigor mature manhood and with only a few days' warning.

It is unnecessary to name these two boys of whom we write with the tenderest recollections of both, and still cherishing the closest ties of friendship that bound us to the elder, because we knew him best. They were stalwart, fearless boys, and in the powder smoke that partially obscured the carnage of war they proved themselves heroes, as great as any upon whom eulogy was pronounced, over whom maid, wife or mother wept, or over whose remains tablet or statue or monument was raised.

As stated above, it is unnecessary to mention their names. They are enrolled among the many other thousands of the boys who dared every danger and risked every future hope and ambition to maintain the integrity and perpetuity of the Union. But fearing that some of the REVIEW's readers may think these heroes imaginary creations of the writer's brain, we mention their names—affectionately, reverentially—George W. Cromer and Hon. John J. Cromer, of Fort Littleton, Fulton county.

These were two of the gallant boys of the 49th Penna. volunteers. Let the other heroes of the regiment—and they were many—receive also deserving notice than the two boys named above who were natives of Franklin county, and left no stain upon their names.

The tobacco crop in Lincoln, Logan, Wayne and Cabell counties, West Va., has suffered great damage by frost. The crop was the finest ever grown and a great yield was expected. Some of the farmers were fortunate enough to store their crop before the cold snap set in; but others were caught and will lose their entire planting. The damage thus far is estimated at $60,000.

CHURCH AND SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The Lesson For Sunday, October 27.

International Bible lesson for Sunday, October 27, 1895, from I. Samuel 3: 1-13. Title: The child Samuel. Golden text: "Speak, Lord; for thy servant heareth." To get a proper understanding of the lesson the verses preceding the lesson in the chapter must be read. Then it can be seen who Samuel's parents were, and it is important to know what kind of a mother he had. How very much a good mother may shape a child's life for good, and how very much a careless mother misses, and what a mistake she makes, if she fails to perform her whole duty to her child. While Elkanah was probably a kind father and a good husband, the character of Hannah is referred to with special emphasis. Her desire for a son was equalled by the desire that he should be consecrated to God. So when Samuel was but a little boy he was placed under the care of Eli the aged priest. This priest had two sons, also priests, but whether from lack of proper home training or because of weakness or positive perversity they were not good as priests should be, but caused their aged father great sorrow and eventually disgraced their high office and suffered the consequences of their sinfulness.

Years ago in going over the international lessons in a former seven years' course, we had a similar lesson. The Call of Samuel," and it is very proper that it should come around again, because thousands of boys and girls are in the Sunday schools now who were either not born then or too young to study the lessons with much profit. And Bible lessons will well bear repeating and repeated study, and our lives can only be right in God's sight when the lessons so studied are applied in daily living.

In this lesson we learn that children have a place in the house of the Lord.

We learn also, what some people seem to doubt, that God calls or communicates with children.

Sometimes not only children but grown people make mistakes in recognizing the calls of God, and sometimes these calls and the promptings of conscience are deliberately disobeyed or resisted.

Very important messages come from God to children, and quite young children, too; and these messages come not infrequently in times of temptation. It is the voice of God, that restrains from doing wrong or persuades or impels to do right.

Following are the "Teaching Points" given by Bishop Warren in The Sunday School Times:

"The Word of the Lord Came."

This is the one great fact of human history. The manner, whether by dreams, by ecstasy, by explained symbols, by personal dialog, in clear daylight experience, mattered not, so be that the supremely important fact remained. All doubt of that clear fact has long since passed.

In times of general wickedness, especially wickedness of priests, "the word of the Lord was scarce, rare in those days. There was no widely spread vision" (v. 1).

Seeking a medium of communication, God did not speak through Eli, nor his sons, but he found a lad born of pious parents, who consecrated him before his birth, and trained him most religiously. God converses with childhood. He knows every one,—all the moral characteristics and capabilities of Eli, his wicked sons, and of good Samuel.

Childhood was capable of ministering in temple service, of receiving the only divine message that came to a nation. It could be obedient, and tell Eli, though it was a hard message to tell. Samuel was humble, obedient, and communed with God. What other signs of complete, lofty, spiritual life do we need? Well for manhood if it has them.

A church must be apostate that holds that God's revelations to individuals are all in the far past. In New Testament times, Paul exhorts the Colossians as in their normal state, "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another." The whole foundation of the church must be in the fact that the Holy Ghost has come to guide it into all truth The great flood of spiritual power that descended on the prepared Church at Pentecost was not meant to be exceptional and singular, but to be the normal relation between the bride and bridegroom. A life was given that was fitly characterized as a resurrection life. It was meant to be continuous and progressive. The church should pant after God as the hart for the water-brooks. It should hunger and thirst till it is filled. Its ideal must be high, or its performance will be low.

President Cleveland will attend the Atlanta Exposition, and it is stated that on his return he will accept the invitation of Frank Coxe, of Raleigh, North Carolina, to spend some days with the latter gentleman hunting partridges.

The United States Court of Appeals, sitting at San Francisco, has decided the Government's suit for $15,000,000 against the Stanford estate in favor of the estate. The claim was for money due from the Southern Pacific Railway, of which the late Senator Stanford was president.

The term of 1895 of the United States supreme court opened in Washington Monday of last week. On Tuesday the Chief Justice began the call of the docket, which comprises 775 cases.

A Michigan newspaper is vigorously booming the project of establishing a coffin factory in the town where it is published. No matter how hard times are, it argues, people will die, and they must be buried; and that the coffin business, therefore, will always be booming.

While attempting to board a moving train at Smithsburg, Md., Saturday Oct. 12, Adam Kendall had one foot cut off at the ankle and the other crushed to a pulp. The unfortunate man who is 22 years old was taken to the city hospital on the evening train. Amputation of both feet was necessary.

"Daniel Lizer, living near Lincolnville, Ind., while rummaging around in his garret," says the Indianapolis Journal, "found an old trunk that had remained unopened for years, and which contained the first pair of handcuffs ever worn by John Brown. The cuffs are very heavy, and are made to be held in position on the wrists by screws. Asa Maysteller had charge of the armory where Brown was imprisoned, and presented him with the handcuffs thirty-two years ago. Mr. Lizer lived at Harper's Ferry at the time of the uprising."

Drink from the cup—never from the saucer.

Teaspoons are left in the saucer, not in the cup.

Little children only have the napkin arranged as a bib.

Making a noise, either in eating or drinking, is vulgar.

Always cheerfully defer to older people and to guests.

Eat slowly, and do not fill the mouth with large quantities.

Eat the food served, or quietly leave it upon the plate without remark.

Avoid drumming with the fingers or the feet, it is the height of impoliteness.

If in doubt at any time as to what is proper, follow the example of others of more experience.

Patiently await the coming of your turn: do not follow with your eyes the food served to others.

Never unnecessarily handle the dishes, or in any other manner exhibit nervousness or impatience.

Do not feel obliged to "clean up the plate;" especially do not make a laborious display of doing so.

Do not ask for any particular part of a fowl, or similar dish, unless asked your preference.

A Wonderful Apple.

On Fred's birthday his Aunt Kate said, "After you have enjoyed all the rest of your presents, come and see what I have for you."

So of course he hurried over that afternoon, and was very curious to know what surprise was waiting for him.

Aunt Kate led him out to the orchard, and there, hanging low on a young tree, was a large rosy apple. She lifted him up so he could pluck it from the bough, and what was his surprise when he saw h's own name, Fred, shining out in great white letters on the red apple. How in the world did those letters get there?

The skin was smooth, so that it could not have been cut with a knife, or painted: Aunt Kate smiled at the little boy's wonder, and then told him how, many weeks before, she had cut the letters out of thick paper aud pasted them carefully on the young apple.

The warm sunshine of August had colored the apple skin, but under the paper it remained white, and so made a wonderful birthday surprise for her little nephew Fred.

They Were Swindling Veterans.

The Fulton Republican gives the following information that may serve as a hint to the many old soldiers who read the REVIEW:

Of interest to veterans.—Recently Fulton county has been canvassed by parties who claim to represent those in authority in the erection of the proposed "Easel-shaped National Monument," in memory of the soldiers of the late war. The monument is to be erected from funds derived from the sale of a picture representing the monument, on which will appear the soldier's army record, &c. An advance payment was requested of a certain per cent., by the canvassers referred to above, previous to the delivery of the picture. Some of the veterans, hereabouts, viewed the movement with suspicion, and wrote to The National Tribune, Washington, D. C., as that paper was quoted as reference, concerning the project which elicited the following reply:

THE NATIONAL TRIBUNE,
Washington, D. C., Oct. 12, '95.

LEVI DEHART, COMRADE:—We know nothing about the Easel Monument Co., but think it is a good thing to let it alone.

Yours, in F. C. & L.,
JOHN MCELROY.

Drummed Out.

While at Carthage, Mo., in the spring of 1862, for the offence of jay-hawking a gold watch of an old citizen that lived thereabouts, a poor fellow was court-martialed and sentence was pronounced. One bright morning very soon after, the order was issued by Col. Clayton for our regiment to prepare for dress-parade, then to form a hollow square around the courthouse, where plain view could be had of the victim. There was a barber's chair; a barber, too; a paper hat and butternut suit of rags, and two or three large boxes to elevate the man so as to be in plain view. The sentence was: Head shaved; to be branded on the right or left thigh with red-hot letter T. The said sentence was performed right there, right in full view of all. After the man's blue uniform had been removed he was arrayed in gray, then he was drummed out of camp.—National Tribune.—

THE BEST FOR EVERYBODY

BECAUSE

It is easy to find the word wanted. Words are given their correct alphabetical places, each one beginning a paragraph.

It is easy to ascertain the pronunciation. The pronunciation is shown by the ordinary diacritically marked letters used in the schoolbooks.

It is easy to trace the growth of a word. The etymologies are full, and the different meanings are given in the order of their development.

It is easy to learn what a word means. The definitions are clear, explicit, and full, and each is contained in a separate paragraph.
